

Transform economic downturns into study abroad opportunities

In the current global landscape, where economic fluctuations frequently trigger widespread apprehension and uncertainty, the concept of studying abroad emerges as a beacon of opportunity and strategic foresight. Subhakar Alapati, the founder director of Global Tree, articulates a compelling viewpoint on this matter. He posits that while economic downturns undeniably present numerous challenges, they concurrently offer fertile ground for personal and professional development. According to him, "Economic recessions, while presenting challenges, can also be favourable for personal and professional growth. Studying abroad during such times can be one of those strategic moves that have a long-term impact on the career."

In light of the ever-changing economic landscapes, Alapati shifts the discourse towards leveraging these uncertain times as a conduit for up-skilling and future-proofing careers. He underscores the importance of targeting fields that are not only in demand but are also pivotal to the future landscape of the global economy, such as Artificial Intelligence, Renewable Energy, and Cybersecurity. These areas, according to him, are crucial for students aiming to acquire skills that are relevant and in alignment with the evolving demands of the job market. He articulates, "Gain a competitive edge: During a tsunami of uncertain markets, an individual with the ability to thrive in diverse environments stands still. And this skill can be adapted through international education."

He also highlights the importance of expanding professional networks through studying abroad, which can lead to exciting career opportunities. He advises strategically investing by choosing on-demand courses from countries like the USA, UK, Canada, Australia, Germany, etc., to ensure the acquisition of future-ready skills.

Regarding the do's and don'ts for students during a recession, he advises, "Proactive planning is key: Start planning your study abroad process well in advance," emphasizing the importance of authenticity and financial preparedness. He cautions against ignoring education loans, resorting to unethical practices, and submitting hasty applications, suggesting that "An expert guidance from Global Tree throughout the process can be an added advantage to avoid mistakes and rejections," he adds.

Alapati reinforces the notion that studying overseas during a recession is a strategic move, enhancing candidates' skills, perspectives, and abilities to succeed in an uneven job market. "We assist students in selecting the best on-demand courses from top universities and provides support with the application process, education loans, visa processes, and interviews" he concludes.
